Description The Air Force Research Laboratory is offering a fellowship in the Human Performance Research wing within the Aerospace Physiology research team.

What will I be doing?

As an Oak Ridge Institute for Science and Education (ORISE) participant, you will join a community of scientists and researchers in an effort to perform laboratory and/or field experiments and record data according to research protocols.

Why should I apply?

Under the guidance of a mentor, you will gain hands-on experience to complement your education and support your academic and professional goals. Along the way, you will engage in activities and research in several areas. These include, but are not limited to:

- Recruitment of active duty and civilian subjects for human subjects research studies
- Conduct pre-screening and obtain informed consent per approved research principles
- Use and maintain laboratory equipment for research studies; create standard operating procedure documents for equipment as necessary
- Prepare testing in both field and laboratory settings that includes physiological, biological, and cognitive data from human subjects
- Organize collected data
- Communicate with principal investigator and research team
- Reviewing and analyzing data from research studies
- Preparation of abstracts, reports, presentations, and publications for military and research communities
- Follow all established standard operating procedures

Where will I be location?

Dayton, Ohio

What is the anticipated start date?

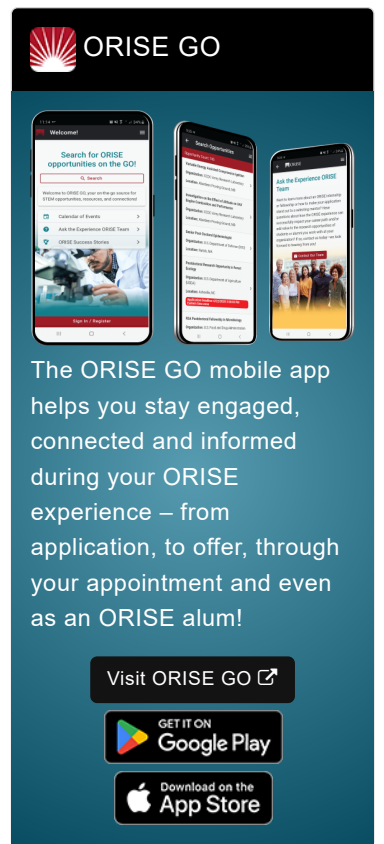

Exact start dates will be determined at the time of selection and in coordination with the selected candidate. Applications are reviewed on an ongoing basis and internships or fellowships will be filled as qualified candidates are identified.

What is the appointment length?

This appointment is a 12-month research appointment, with the possibility to be renewed for additional research periods. Appointments may be extended depending on funding availability, project assignment, program rules, and availability of the participant.

What are the benefits?

You will receive a stipend to be determined by AFRL. Stipends are typically based on a participant's academic standing, discipline, experience, and research facility location. Other
